Manager Commentary

President Trump's recent shift on tariffs marks a retreat from the bold promise of "90 trade deals in 90 days". With less than a week to go, the administration has only secured a limited agreement with the UK and a partial de-escalation with China. Instead of sweeping accords, interim deals are being pursued, retaining a 10% levy on U.S. consumers of foreign goods. While the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE) has achieved notable cost savings, June's tariffs delivered billions in extra revenue. Meanwhile, the Senate remains locked in debate over the fiscal deficit. President Trump's expansive "One Big Beautiful Bill Act" seeks to reshape federal tax policy, welfare programmes, immigration enforcement, and energy priorities. Key measures include extending the 2017 tax cuts, cutting Medicaid by $900 billion, reducing green incentives, and boosting fossil fuel investment. Tariff-driven U.S. revenue and the "One Big Beautiful Bill" point to debt-led growth.

Although U.S. equities rallied further in June, analysts cautioned that unresolved trade issues could fuel future market volatility.

The economic backdrop in the world's largest economy remains slower than the Trump administration would prefer, with signs of potential stagflation as interest rates stay higher for longer. A potential replacement for Federal Reserve Chair, Jerome Powell, may align more closely with Trump's views, opening the door to future rate cuts. However, Trump's ongoing criticism of Powell remains notable. The 10-year U.S. Treasury yield stands at around 4.23%—it's down slightly, yet still high in terms of debt servicing. Meanwhile, the dollar recorded its steepest first-half decline in over 50 years—partly a Trump objective, though also reflecting erratic White House policy.

In June, European stocks outperformed the U.S. The Stoxx Europe 600 rose steadily, with Germany's DAX and Spain's IBEX 35 each up around 20% year-to-date, driven by low inflation, monetary support, and public investment. UK markets showed mixed performance, as the FTSE 100 posted modest gains amid weak domestic demand and persistent inflation. Japan's Nikkei surged 6.64%, while firms cut U.S. export costs to absorb tariffs—pressuring future earnings. China and emerging markets were mixed; Hong Kong led on tech optimism.

Commodity, income, and tech holdings performed strongly, while infrastructure and mid-cap funds lagged slightly over the course of the month.

At a portfolio level, the Sustainable Balanced Growth model benefited from its US equity exposure. Of its top holdings, the highest returning fund was the Brown Advisory US Sustainable Growth fund. One of the fund's largest holdings is Marvell Technology, who develop and produce semiconductors and related technology. Semiconductors are essential to modern technology, powering everything from smartphones to medical devices and driving advancements across a wide range of industries. They play a vital role in sectors such as computing, telecommunications, healthcare, automotive, and clean energy. Semiconductors enable innovations including electric vehicles, renewable energy systems, and advanced medical equipment, making them a key component of a sustainable future.
